Women in Islam

By TYNNETTA DEANAR

The woman who accepts Islam today is among the most honored of the women of the world. She not only accepts a life of aspirant spiritual perfection but also a way of life of the highest quality which yields inspiration, harmony and fortitude to the relationship of the family and of the society. The reasons why many of our women are unable to see Islam in this way is because they have never accepted Islam to realize the results.

But observe the Muslim women who follow the teachings of the Honorable Elijah Muhammad and notice the change that has transpired. It is not in the spirit of condemnation that I offer this observation but in the spirit of hope that you will like what you see and with the added hope that this observation may affect your conversion.

IT IS not in passing that the Honorable Elijah Muhammad reminds us of the times in which we live but it is in the realization of the dark and dreadful days that are approaching.

Our ancient history is glorious and magnificent, and it is only since we were captured by our enemies that we have forgotten our grand trek through the past. Do you remember the history of Egypt, perhaps the first country of antiquity that the historical accounts were able to preserve? What do you think or know of the racial origin of the Egyptians?

Were they of the black or of the white race in origin?

Certainly, your answer depends upon your history teacher. But I think, like several others, that the best source of information obtainable is from the people of this grand country and of this great continent that is called today Africa.

THE WOMAN who accepts Islam today does not accept a dying tree that rests upon the ancient monuments of ancient Egypt or of the ancient world, but she accepts the once missing link to her past which directs her perspective in the future. We are, teaches Messenger Muhammad, the mothers of civilization who know not of a beginning and will never know of an ending.

To the Black Women of the United States, we the Muslim women beckon to you to accept Islam and accept a permanent life for yourselves and children on this earth. "Come to Islam, come to success."
