

Bilalian News moves to 'new home'

In a development that will streamline unwarranted production overhead and ultimately herald the way for new and improved readership features, the editorial and circulation staff of Bilalian News recently relocated to its new office facilities in the W.C.I.W. Pioneer Office Building at 7801 South Cottage Grove Ave.

In a recent interview, Nadar Ali, newly appointed W.C.I.W. business administrator, explained that "leaving the encumbering Muhammad Speaks plant and having our paper printed in a Chicago printing pool for publishers will allow us to significantly improve the quality of Bilalian News. At the same time, it will enable us to pass on a considerable saving to our readership in terms of an expanded scope of service that Bilalian News will be able to provide.

"In the coming weeks," Ali said, "our readership can watch for a new and improved Bilalian News."

He also announced that the paper has now opened its pages for outside classified and display ads.
