

Nature Of Separation

Ever since Almighty God created the universe, there has been separation going on in it. The germ, the atom of life was a double section and there was separation in it. In our brain, the cells are separated. According to the creation of the people of present civilization today, they were also separated in the beginning of their time.

When God created the heavens and the earth, he separated planets from thirty million to four billion or more miles apart. He did not make one planet after the matter or kind of the other. Each was created of an essence that was independent of itself in the sphere where it was created. This proves the superiority of God and his wisdom. He could create and bring into being anything that he willed and would not have to borrow from another. He could make worlds, planets rotating in space independent of one another. Each one different in color and each different in size. There are no two planets having the same civilization.

In the creation of the life on the earth and the water on earth, you find a great variety of life. If we go to the sea, we find fishes after their kind. There are many fishes and all are going in schools to themselves. They mate on to their own kind.

On the surface, we see birds of many kinds flying over our heads, in the bushes and in the trees. Each of these birds mate on to their own kind. If they did not mate on to their own kind, we would not see great clouds of black birds flying over us. We would not see a cloud of red birds and brown birds all going to themselves. The birds build their nests and you do not find other birds trying to house themselves in there with them. If they try, there is a fight.

Even in animal life, there is separation. Among insect life whether they are crawling on their legs or on their bellies or flying on their wings, they all mate with their own kind. If you go to a red ant bed, you will find all red ants. If any other ant tries to enter they will kill him. If a big red ant will crawl over in the small black ant's house, all of them come out and kill him. He does not get away. In the jungle, all the beasts live to themselves and mate onto their own kind.

Among human beings, the black man lives in Africa. The brown man is living on the islands of the Pacific. The yellow man living on the continent known as Asia. The red man is here in North America and elsewhere. Before the coming of the white man, this was a red man's home.

If there had not been an interference or intermixing because of the white man's desire to have power and rule the nations of the earth, there would not have been any mixing in the islands of the Pacific among the inhabitants there.

You can't blame the white man for beating and kicking you and busting in your skull, hanging you on a tree for trying to get into his house. He does not want your kind mixing with his kind.

If you had been proud of yourself and loved your own kind, you would have busted his head and hung him on a tree if he tried to get into your house. You would, today, be respected.

We want unity. We want to know each other. We want to unite with each other. We want to love each. We want the same for ourselves as other nations.
